UCSC engages students with communities and partners to build a more just Chicago.

Founded as a University office in 1996 by Michelle Obama and part of the Office of Civic Engagement, UCSC prepares students to become productive, thoughtful citizens and effective, inspiring leaders in their communities and professions by providing them with service opportunities that complement a rigorous academic experience.

UCSC encourages students to explore Chicago, to make meaningful connections with diverse communities throughout the city, to develop friendships with other civic-minded students, and to apply classroom learning to understanding and addressing social issues.

Each year, more than 2,000 students participate in UCSC programs and events in partnership with more than 250 organizations throughout Chicago.
Collaborating to Create Social Change in Chicago

We collaborate with our many partners, both on and off-campus, and from the private, non-profit, and government sectors, to ensure that every possible avenue towards a more just Chicago is explored by and available to UChicago students.

UCSC programming represents only some dimensions of the broader range of possible efforts to effect social change.

In addition to the professional staff, we rely on the efforts of 15 undergraduate and graduate student interns who directly manage many of our programs and events throughout the year. UCSC internships offer our student staff a concrete experience of leadership, the chance to collaborate with like-minded peers, and opportunities for sustained mentorship and professional development.

Citywide UCSC Involvement

During the academic year, UCSC engages students with over 250 community organizations throughout Chicago. This map indicates the depth of this involvement in various areas of the city; yellow indicates the areas where the most students are engaged with the most community-based organization partners.

Supporting Civic Leaders

The ability to effect meaningful social change involves the development of a number of interrelated civic competencies. Some of these, such as regular reflection on the implications of one’s decisions and an awareness of one’s unique potential for contribution, are highly individualized. Others, such as empathy, collaboration, and commitment to diversity, affect how one behaves in groups. Still others, such as an understanding of systemic issues of social injustice and a commitment to socially responsible action in the face of these, affect how one understands oneself as a member of a community and as an engaged citizen. UCSC programming helps students develop specific competencies in each of these domains, with the goal of supporting all our programs’ participants in their holistic development as leaders in their communities and in their fields.

“UCSC redefined the trajectory of my college experience. It made me more socially-conscious and enriched my commitment to a life in public service.”

Second-year College student

“Before college, I never even considered a career in social justice. Now it’s the only option for me — I can’t imagine working in an area that doesn’t involve tackling systemic issues and raising awareness about the causes I care about.”
